MESSAGE: Sir: If my memory serves me, Yucca Mountain is the Area 6 site which has been bombarded with nuclear bombs to the point where it looks like a lunar landscape. If this is right, then the area is already radioactive for the next 10,000 years. Why would the public want to create another radioactive site in the United States when this one already exists. It would seem to me that this is the most logical place to store radioactive materials. Transportation of such materials is safer today than driving your car to the market. Someone must have explained this by now but I just wanted to get my two cents in. Thanks, Bob Hellen
